

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

David DREWES is Associate Professor in the Department of Religion at the University of Manitoba. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Virginia. His research focuses on Indian Buddhism, especially early Mahāyāna.

David Drewes • Department of Religion • 328 Fletcher Argue Bldg. • University of Manitoba • Winnipeg, MB R3T 2N2 • Canada
Email: David.Drewes@umanitoba.ca

Dylan ESLER is a scholar and translator of Tibetan Buddhist texts. He holds an MA in Buddhist Studies from the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS), University of London, and is currently a research scholar at the Institut Orientaliste of the Université Catholique de Louvain (Belgium), where he is preparing a PhD. He is working on a translation and study of an important tenth-century Tibetan text on the subject of meditation. His research interest focuses on early rNying-ma expositions of rDzogs-chen and Tantra.

Dylan Esler • Institut Orientaliste • Université Catholique de Louvain • INCAL • Place Blaise Pascal 1, bte. L3.03.32 • B-1348 Louvain-la-Neuve • Belgium
Email: dylan.esler@uclouvain.be

Phillip Scott Ellis GREEN is an independent scholar specializing in early Buddhist traditions of India and Southeast Asia, with particular interest in early Cambodia. He obtained his PhD in Religion from the University of Florida in 2014. His research examines Buddhist traditions among the Khmers primarily during the tenth century via a reexamination of the architectural, art historical, and epigraphical sources composed in Old Khmer and Sanskrit. He has taught courses in the academic study religion for the University of Florida, Kalamazoo College, and the College of Idaho.

Email: phillipsegreen@gmail.com

Eric GREENE is Assistant Professor of Religious Studies at Yale University. He received his PhD, in Buddhist Studies, from the University of California, Berkeley, in 2012. His research focuses on all aspects of the history of medieval Chinese Buddhism, with a particular interest in Buddhist meditation, repentance and confession rituals in medieval China, and the history of the translation of Buddhist texts into Chinese. He has published articles on early Chan, Buddhist paintings from the Silk Roads, early Buddhist meditation practices in China, and vegetarianism in Chinese Buddhism. His main current research projects are a book on visionary experience in early Chinese Buddhism, and a book on Chinese Buddhist translation practices during the Han and Three Kingdoms period.

Eric M. Greene • Department of Religious Studies • Yale University • 451 College St • New Haven, CT 06511 • USA
Email: eric.greene@yale.edu

Taiken KYUMA is Associate Professor of Humanities at Mie University. He received his Dr. Phil. in Buddhist studies from the University of Vienna in 1999. His research focuses mainly on Buddhist logic and epistemology, and he is currently working on the relationship between tantric and non-tantric doctrines in late Indian Buddhism.

Taiken Kyuma • Faculty of Humanities, Law and Economics • Mie University • 1577 Kurimamachiya-cho, Tsu, Mie-Pref, PO Box 514-8507 • Japan
Email: kyuma@human.mie-u.ac.jp

Daniel McNAMARA is a PhD Candidate in West and South Asian Religions at Emory University, Atlanta, Georgia, USA. His dissertation is focused on philosophical and historical aspects of Ratnākaraśānti's Madhyamakālaṃkāravṛtti. His research broadly concerns the relations between philosophy and meditation in Himalayan Buddhism, as well as the historical interactions between Buddhism and Islam in Central Asia.

Daniel McNamara • West and South Asian Religions, Graduate Division of Religion • Atlanta, GA, 30322 • USA
Email: dan.raa@gmail.com

John NEWMAN is John T. and Catherine D. MacArthur Professor Emeritus of Asian Religions at New College of Florida, Sarasota, Florida USA. He received his PhD in Buddhist Studies from the University of Wisconsin–Madison in 1987. His research interests center on Indian and Tibetan Vajrayāna Buddhism, and his publications focus on the Kālacakra tantra. He is currently working on a study of the relationship between philosophy and mysticism in the Kālacakra.

John Newman • Division of Humanities • New College of Florida • Sarasota, FL 34243 • USA
Email: newman@ncf.edu

Andrew QUINTMAN is Associate Professor of Religious Studies at Yale University, where he specializes in the Buddhist traditions of Tibet and the Himalaya. His book The Yogin and the Madman: Reading the Biographical Corpus of Tibet's Great Saint Milarepa (Columbia University Press 2014) won the American Academy of Religion's 2014 Award for Excellence in the Study of Religion and the 2015 Heyman Prize for outstanding scholarship from Yale.

His English translation of The Life of Milarepa was published by Penguin Classics in 2010. His interests include Buddhist literature and history, sacred geography and pilgrimage, and visual cultures of the wider Himalayan region. He is currently writing a history of Brag dkar rta so Monastery in Tibet's southern frontier and a study of the Buddha's life story through Tibetan visual and literary materials.

Andrew Quintman • Department of Religious Studies • Yale University •
451 College St • New Haven, CT 06511 • USA • www.andrewquintman.com

Email: andrew.quintman@yale.edu

Péter-Dániel SZÁNTÓ (1980) initially studied Tibetan and Indology at ELTE Budapest. He received his Dr. Phil. from the University of Oxford (Balliol College, 2012), where he was also a Junior Research Fellow (Merton College, 2010–2013). After a ten-month stipend at the University of Hamburg, he returned to Oxford in 2014 as a Post-Doctoral Research Fellow at All Souls College. His research focuses mainly on mature esoteric Buddhism in India, its texts, its development and transmission, and its socio-historical background.

Péter-Dániel Szántó • All Souls College • Oxford OX1 4AL • UK

Email: peter.szanto@all-souls.ox.ac.uk

Alexander YIANNPOULOS is a doctoral candidate in West and South Asian Religions through the Graduate Division of Religion at Emory University in Atlanta, Georgia, USA. His research interests include the Indian and Tibetan Buddhist scholastic traditions, with particular emphasis on reflexive awareness as a feature of both epistemology and contemplative practice. He is currently working on his dissertation, a study and translation of the latter half of the Perception chapter of the Pramāṇavārttika, concerning mental-representations-only and reflexive awareness.

Alexander Yiannopoulos • Graduate Division of Religion • Emory University • Atlanta, GA 30322 • USA

Email: ayiannopoulos@gmail.com